Cigna and Connecticut Sustainable Business Council to Host Sustainable Well-being Forum, Connecting Health and Environment

BLOOMFIELD, Conn., 22 October, 2018 - Global health service company Cigna (NYSE: CI) and the Connecticut Sustainable Business Council (CTSBC) will host “Building a Culture of Sustainable Well-being” to explore the connections between health and the environment on Tuesday, Oct. 30. Cigna, a CTSBC member company, will host this event at its Bloomfield headquarters from 5:30 to 8 p.m. The event will feature noted sustainability experts Gary Cohen, founder of Healthcare without Harm and Practice GreenHealth; Jeffrey Hollander, founder of Seventh Generation and Co-founder, Sustain Natural; and Anne Hulick, a registered nurse, attorney, and Connecticut State Director of Clean Water Action.

Mary Engvall, director, Cigna Foundation, civic affairs and corporate responsibility will present “Creating a Human and Planetary Health Connection within the Workplace” and will also serve as a panelist. Heather Burns, CEO and founder of CTSBC, will moderate the panel discussion.

“Cigna is proud to make this event possible as part of our commitment to corporate responsibility,” Engvall said. “Cigna Connects, our unique approach to corporate responsibility, aligns with Cigna’s mission by making powerful connections that positively impact the health of people, communities and the environment.”

Through Cigna Connects, Cigna focuses on making a difference in critical health and well-being issues facing society today, contributing to a healthy environment and ensuring the company follows inclusive business practices.
